byrd knives are a new species of knives produced and imported by Spyderco. They present a cost effective alternative to Spyderco's main CLIPIT line of high-performance knives, standing independently on their own design and performance merits. byrds are unique animals, differentiated from Spyderco products in both appearance and point of manufacture. They are engineered in a partnership between Spyderco's research & development and several custom knifemakers. Spyderco directly oversees the engineering, ergonomics, safety testing and close-quality tolerance manufacturing. Production takes place in China by carefully chosen knifemakers working in conjunction with Spyderco ensuring you purchase a reliable, quality product at a competitive price. byrd knife blades are crafted from 8Cr13Mov stainless steel (similar to AUS-8). 8Cr13Mov is a Molybdenum/Vanadium stainless alloy with .8% carbon. Molybdenum enhances the strength and hardness of the steel. Vanadium boosts its wear resistance and toughness. Carbon augments the steel's tensile strength and increases its resistance to wear and abrasion. The result of these ingredients is a blade steel that retains a sharp cutting edge over time and re-sharpens readily when needed.

Most byrd knives come with a plain or plain/serrated cutting edge. The "comet" shaped opening hole is unique to the designs and represents a symbol of quality. Current byrd knives feature stainless steel handles but several models with fiberglass-reinforced nylon (FRN) and aluminum handles are scheduled for release in the near future. Simple to access and retrieve, they are right-handed with a clothing clip that carries the knife tip-up/tip-down attached to the top of a pocket or belt. Texturing on the blade's spine creates friction, gripping the thumb's pad for slip free cutting. Several models are outfitted with a backlock featuring a David Boye dent: The dent offers an added safety feature, letting you tightly grip the knife's handle by eliminating the possibility of unintentionally releasing the locking mechanism during use.
